

Eight Great wines for Valentine's Day

Today is Valentine's Day, which often includes a special dinner at home or a night out on the town for some people. That makes it a great time to consider trying some special wines. These eight wines are great for tonight or for any special occasion coming up in the future.

However, as I have said before, special doesn't always have to mean expensive. One of the great things about the current wine market is that overall quality has never been higher, and with many regions offering great values, the opportunities to try new, exciting wines also is at an all time high.

My go-to food wines are Pinot Noir and Riesling, but people also should consider sparkling wine or Champagne with food, particularly for a special occasion such as Valentine's Day.

Below are my recommendations for great wines for this special occasion. If you can't find these, ask your wine store worker for something similar from the same location.

Louis Latour Pouilly-Fuisse 2015

This great French white wine is a great food wine and offers up aromas and flavors of lemons, peaches, grapefruit and has mineral notes that add to the complexity.

It would be perfect with seafood or chicken in a cream sauce.

It should cost about $30.
